INTRODUCTION

Gender is not merely a biological or natural category but a complex social construct that shapes how individuals experience the world. From a feminist perspective, understanding gender involves examining how power, inequality, and cultural norms influence the roles, expectations, and opportunities assigned to people based on their perceived sex. The objective of this course is to question how societies define and enforce gender norms; feminism seeks to uncover the systemic roots of inequality and promote social transformation toward justice and equity for all genders. This perspective highlights that gender is dynamic and deeply connected to other forms of identity such as race, class, sexuality, and ability.
